OOOPS! Ceasefire over? Nope! Wait...

Two days ago, Iran attacked commercial vessels in the Strait of Hormuz. Iran now says that it was attacked not by the official people, but by an unofficial group. So, Trump has told Iran to make an official promise not to attack Hormuz anymore. Iran has also admitted that they previously tried to assassinate Trump. However, even though Iran has said it is a mistake, they are still attacking because he cannot undo his declaration (unambiguous declaration) that the ceasefire was over, and that Iran hasn't promised they won't attack Hormuz anymore. Additionally, Iran did have plans to assassinate Trump and the Supreme leader vowed revenge on the assassination of the previous leader. Therefore, maybe, only maybe, will the war end. Also, this means that maybe the July 10th edition, 10/7/2026, has errors, when we wrote the ceasefire was over. Therefore, the Strait hasn't closed and oil prices are again increasing.

FIFA world cup

As England beats Norway at 2 to 1, England still has a chance to win. But if France is paired with Spain, England needs to deal with Argentina, after it won 3 to 1 with Switzerland. However, at least they won't need to deal with the "annoying" Switzerland, as they are very good defenders, as Chris Sutton, the former England forward on BBC radio 5 live puts it, "Based on what I've seen tonight, I think if you're Thomas Tuchel and England you're thinking 'come on, Argentina, go through'. They look easier to play against than the Swiss team".

This is going to be the first time England and Argentina are going to be together to play since 2005, where England won. However, in the other times, 1986 and 1998, England lost to Argentina. Therefore, England's chance of winning is tiny, though not none. Therefore, these
